ATTENTION FELLOWS & RESIDENTS: Congenital Cardiology Today Provides a Great Opportunity!

John W. Moore, MD, MPH

Share your clinical experiences or your research projects in a well-established and widely circulated pediatric and congenital cardiology-oriented publication. The staff of Congenital Cardiology Today (CCT) is well aware that trainees have significant research and educational requirements as part of the curriculum. Congenital Cardiology Today offers the unique opportunity to fast-track clinical and research projects into publications which a large part of the pediatric and congenital cardiology community will encounter. Publication in CCT can provide excellent exposure for your work and will assist you in meeting training requirements and in securing additional training opportunities and jobs!

CCT accepts interesting case reports and case series as well as reviews of clinical topics relevant to the practice of pediatric and congenital cardiologists. Such manuscripts are generally not eligible for review and publication in standard cardiology journals. Moreover, in the few journals which consider case-centered-manuscripts, there is often a prolonged delay after submission for review and publication. In addition, there is no fee for publication, including color images, in CCT. Our editorial policies encourage these submissions, and we provide timely review and publication. On average, approximately 50% of submissions are accepted, and accepted articles are generally published within four to six months of receipt of the manuscript. Congenital Cardiology Today has found that such articles are often of considerable interest to our readership of busy practitioners.

CCT encourages you to write up the very interesting cases you encounter in training. Make sure to include some good figures, tables, etc. Send them to us for review. Also, if you have prepared a Grand Rounds or an interesting lecture for presentation in your hospital, consider writing it up and sending it for review and likely publication.

Instructions for authors are easily accessed on the website: <https://www.congenitalcardiologytoday.com/editorial>

Submit your article to Kate.f.Baldwin@gmail.com

I look forward to reviewing your submissions.
